Synopsis

Truman Korovin is a lonely, sharp-witted cab driver in Fairbanks, Alaska, 1980. The usual routine of picking up fares and spending his nights at his favorite bar, the Boatel, is disrupted when his girlfriend, Emily, dumps him on one of the coldest nights of the year.

After an acid trip, Truman winds up in the local 'loony bin'. Imprisoned in a grueling therapy group, Truman gets re-acquainted with loonies who are his old cab fares, which includes a local stripper he has insulted more than once. In this world, Truman must find or lose himself.

Additional Information

"Tom Hines and Michael Kamsky's shaggy movie may be more potent than Great North weed." -Variety

From Michael Kamsky's smart, sardonic screenplay, director Tom Hines musters exactly the kind of askew sensibility that takes dark subject matter and cracks it open without ever selling his characters short.
